THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 11, 1856.

CHARLES DICKENS AND LITTLE CHILDREN. In Lond n there has been established an "Hospital for Sick Children." Since the institution was opened in 1852, 57,100 outpatients and 1860 in-patients have been admitted, all under twelve years of age, and of March 13th, 1858. the whole number, 28,500 under five. The first festival in aid of the funds was held on Tuesday evening, the 9th ult., at the Freemasons' Tavern, London. Mr. Charles Dickens occupied the chair, and in giving the toast of the evening he said that from the earliest day of his life it had been one of his maxims to disbelieve the man who told him that he took no interest in children. He felt still bound to that principle by al! considerations, because he knew that any heart that could toughen itself against these little perple must be wanting in so many bumanising experiences as to be a perfect monstrosity in nature. (Hear.) He therefore, when we met with the assertion-sometimes, not often--set it down as an idle word originating in a momentary langour, and meaning 20th, 1858. about as much as the assertion that this world had outgrown all the cardinal virtues. (Cheers.) A few years more would be necessary for the increase of their strength and the expansion of their figures, and then their | 1 tables, which now had a few tucks in them, would be let out, and that hall, which now fitted them so easily, would be found too tight and small for their wonderfully increased proportions. (Cheers.) But even in the present company they were not without persons who had some experience of spoiled children. He did not mean of their own, of course - (a laugh)-for no one ever spoiled his own children; but he meant the disagreeable children of their particular friends. (Laughter.) Toey knew by experience what it was to have them down after dinner, plunging recklessly into the dessert, and with the family doctor boming darkly in the distance. (Continued laughter.) No doubt they all knew what it was to sit and see maternal disquietudepainfully evoked by what he might call, after the manner of his | friend Mr. Albert Smith, the toilsome ascent of Miss Mary, and the irruption (cutaneous) of Master Harry. (Great laughter.) They were all painfully aware that such tiresome children would never go to bed, until at last they were carried off bawling and kicking by main force. (Great laughter) An eye-xitness had once told him that, being once in company with a learned pundit who had assembled all the distinguished philosophers of the day at his house to hear him expound his views respecting infant education and early mental development, while the pundit was laying down his principles, his little boy amused the company by plunging boldly into an apple pie, anneinting his bair with the syrup, combing it with a fork, and then carefully smoothing it down with a spoon .--(Much laughter.) But the spoilt children he had to present after dinner on that day had been spoilt in a far different manner; and they were a far more numerous, and, if possible, a far more interesting class.— The children to whom he alluded were the spoilt children of the poor of this great city, the children who were effectually spoilt of this life by tens of thousands, but who in vast numbers might be preserved if they, not contravening the way of Providence, would only help and save them. (Hear, hear.) Those two grim nurses, poverty and sickness, which brought these poor children before them that day, breathed the breath of fever over their wretched cradles, nailed up their little coffins, and piled up the earth upon their graves. Of the annual deaths in this great town the unnatural ones formed nore than one-third of the whole number -He should not ask his audience, as in the case of other spoilt children, to observe how good or how pretty they were, but how like death they were, and he should implore them by the remembrance of every thing that was hapty in their own infancy to extend to these spoilt children of the poor their patronage, their succour, and their compassion. (Hear, hear.) Some time since, being in Scotland, he went with a humane member of that most humane medical profession to visit some of the poor inhabitants of the old town of Edinburgh. In a close wynd, a most picturesque place-he was sorry to say that the picturesque and typus were often very nearly allied-he saw more poverty and sickness than be had ever seen within a similar space. In one wretched dwelling he saw a poor sick child cradled in an egg-box which its mother bad begged from the shop, and that little light of day and from the play with other That case was only a type of thousands occurring in London every day; and if the company he saw around him, which formed a drop of the life blood of the great public heart of the country, would only come forward, three-fourths of these melancholy cases might be annually saved .- 11249, 11251, 11252, will each be entitled to is legally decided by the Maryland Drawings; (Hear, hear.) Having described the bos- $400. If Ticket No. 550 draws the $30,000 all other Lotteries which purport to be decided proceeded to say that the most charming essay of the immortal Charles Lamb represented him at his own fireside telling stories to his dear children, until suddenly the illusion was dispelled and he found they were only dream children, the childrep which be ought to have bad, had be not devoted his life to solitude. Now, the dream children which he (Mr. Dickens) would raise before every one who heard him should be the dear child that they loved, the dear child they might have had, the Certificates of Packages, 10 wle, tickets, $80 00 child they certainly had then, and he would make these dream children say, "Assist these little sufferers in the hospital-assist them for our sakes." (Cheers.) And when he had impressed that vision firmly on their imagination he should wish them suddenly to awake, and, finding themselves in the be forwarded by first mail. Free-masons' Tavern, at once to commence vigorously adding their names to the list of subscriptions. (Cheers and laughter.)-He had now arrived at the close of his too long speech and had only to propose "Prosperity to the Childrens's Hospital." (Loud
